

ABSTRACT

An apparatus for introducing a liquid into a pharmaceutical container such as a vial, having a puncturable closure, comprising a hollow needle with at least one orifice through the needle side wall being oriented to direct liquid flowing along the bore in a direction having a component parallel to the flow direction, with a vent groove in its outer surface. A preferred construction of needle and a process for making it are disclosed.